Dear Ann Withersay,

Many thanks for your letter concerning bereavement support. It has been four years now since I lost Michael my son, but it seems like yesterday to me. You just learn to live with it but you never get over it. I think at that time when you lose someone you don't really know what you need, it's hard to decide whether you need to talk to others because you're not really thinking straight. Each individual's needs can vary, but I do think that something should be offered because we tend to think that now it's over no one out there cares any more. I have coped in my own special way, but that's not saying everyone else has. The main problem that I do have is that I blame all the drugs that Michael took, they caused many problems with his health. So much that I even believe he would still be here now. I wish I knew the truth because I could have stopped him taking them. I don't know if I will ever find out but that is something that will not leave my thoughts.

I don't know if my letter has been of any help, but if I can be of any help to anyone in my area I would be willing to go and have a chat with them.

I would also be willing to meet others to talk in a group etc. Even after four years it does help to talk.

year it does help to Hope to have ~~off~~ from you again.
