Dear Colette,

I am replying to the correspondence that you gave me when you attended the last liver clinic. Unfortunately there is a lot of misconception in Dr. Peter Jones's statement and to what extent that is poor reporting I do not know. If you wish to discuss these issues in particular with me I would suggest you make an appointment to see me.

With regard to the specific issue of Recombinant Factor VIII I enclose your recent results and in actual fact your Factor VIII is now within normal limits and, therefore, is highly unlikely that you would need to have any Factor VIII replacement.

As you know there are ongoing discussions between the UK Haemophilia Centre Doctors' Organisation, the Haemophilia Society and Lord Hunt, the Minister, who had some interest in this area; it may be that an agreement will be reached in the future, and that this will necessitate a "phased roll out". There is a terrible shortage of Recombinant Factor VIII at the present time such that we are having to ration children, so I do not think it is going to be conceivable in the near future to treat all adults.

With kind regards.

Yours sincerely

GRO-C
